Warlike Preparations in Prussia and France. Extract from a Letter in the Brussels Bullet

I understand now the angulsh of Prince Napoleon. It is impossible to travel in this termany—so printent, so firm, and so patriotic—without seeing what a formidable rival we have contributed to raise up against ourselves. Neither in Northern or Southern Germany do people desire war. "What have we done," they say, "that the French should wish to attack they large the property of th sear, "that the French have We done, they say," (that the French should wish to attack us? Let them only leave us to settle our own affairs among ourselves," "We are no Prussi (as," say the Wurtembergers and Bivarians, with one voire; "but it is our business, and not that of France, to resist the absorbing temlencies of Prussia," I cannot help observing a vagne fear of a sudden attack from France. The Germans know, tor-she boasts herself, that she is "ready"—that her navy especially is ready—and they are upprehensive. It is known that Prussia has lately sent as many as six noore mi itary spices to Metz Trionville and Strasburg. On the othe hand the Prussian government is well aware that numbers of French officers armsking their observations on the Main into the favorits tint. He loves plumpness, and her "Sinal Manna" is at hand to secure emboapoint. Beliadonna ilashes on him from her eyes, Kohl and antimony deepen the blackness of her eyebrows, "bloom of roses" blushes from her lips. She stoops to conquer, and it is no wouder that the fop and the fool go down. The freedom she covets comes with marriage, but it is a freedom threateued by a thou sand accidents, and threatened, above all, by maternity. It is of little use to have bowed to slang and shoulder straps, if it be only to the oneself to a cradle. The nursery stands sadly in the way of the free development of woman; it clips her social enjoyment, it curtaits her bonnet bills. The slavery of nursing a child," one fair protestor tells us, "only it mother knows." And so she invents a pretty theory about the damage done to modern constitutions by our port-driuking forefathers, and ceases to uurse at all. But even this is only partial indepen lence: she paints for perfect freedom from the cares of maternity. Her tone becomes the tone of the household, and the spouse she has won grow is over each new arrival. She is quite ready to welcoune the grow. "Nature," a mother informs us, "turns restive after the birth of two or three children," and mothers turn restive with Nature. "Whitever else you may do," she adds, "you will never persuade us into liking to have children," and if we did we should not greatly value the conversion. And so woman whas her liberty and bows her emphatic reply to the world's appeal, "Give us good mothers," by declining to be a mother at all.
